Epidemiology

The Epidemiology Internship Program is designed to provide students of epidemiology knowledge and understanding of the medical examiner's role in public health surveillance and safety and opportunity to describe and summarized death data using epidemiological methods.

Under the direct supervision of the OCME staff epidemiologist, the intern will assist with internal and external data requests including quality control measures and validation checks; creating standard monthly, annual and special reports; and monitoring and summarizing literature relevant to specific data requests. The intern is expected to be available for 10-15 hours per week during normal business hours. Students currently enrolled in an undergraduate or graduate program in public health are eligible to apply.
